When the Swiss go to the ballots on March 8, one of the issues on the menu will be a referendum. That issue involves a proposal to ban the sale of housing for sex workers, to reduce crime and to elect a new government for Switzerland.

The referendum is one of the more than 200,000 on the menu for the Swiss electorate. It's only one of the many that might be rejected by the Swiss, who are known for their love of democracy and rejection of the status quo.

The referendum is just one of the many that might be rejected by the Swiss, who are known for their love of democracy and rejection of the status quo.